If Pigs Were Human

If pigs were human

at first they would establish strict divisions between domestic and wild pigs. The palace pigs wouldn't ever leave their dwellings again and heavily armed defend those and they'd loose contact to reality.

If pigs were human, the wild pigs would spend their life on the road.

In short: There wouldn't exist no longer any similarity between the pig's kinds.

One part would be hunted and consumed and the other would build palaces.

If pigs were human.

If pigs were human

As a result the palace pigs would get more degenerated, they wouldn't move any longer because they'd only stick their noses into the asses of other pigs.

If pigs were human, they would realise a romantic and global network.

They'd invent science, policy and religion in order to authorize their greed and enslavement of the wild pigs.

They'd invent an elaborated system, namely the market economy, to blackmail the wild pigs in order to make them work for their added value

If pigs were human

they would degenerate mentally, morally, spiritually and physically because of this pseudo life.

If pigs were human, they would invent remedies to make their pink pig skin shine bright again and to cover up the anal smell.

They'd get increased their teats to make all others believe they'd be potent and generative.

They wouldn't know any longer if they are mail or female and they wouldn't give a shit.

They wouldn't give a shit because everybody would be fuckable to the need.

If pigs were human

they would form media groups which would spread their vain grimaces their decadent aesthetic and their materialistic point of view throughout the world via satellite, the internet and magazines.

As in the stables would live more and more pigs because of the increases survival aid wars would become dispensable as they would hurt themselves anyway because of the narrowness.

If pigs were human they would rather solve this problem by creating even more elaborated strategies to exploit the wild pigs.

Global Attitudes

If pigs were human

they would subdue all manifestations of life to the market.

They would compete for outfit, dress up disguise themselves beyond recognition and get draped with gold in order to hide their very character.

After a short time in deed there wouldn't exist any character and personality anymore, similar to human race.

Annually they would elect the most powerful palace pig to grant him the Award, the Oscar or the Bambi for the most abnormal and ruthless behaviour of the year

If pigs were human

they would clutter up each other's asses until they'd nearly burst.

Indeed they would have to do this in order to maintain their life conditions.

If all this would stop functioning they would pity the wild pigs in an unexplainable attack of compassion.

They'd organise Life-Aid concerts, collect donations to manifest how sorry they would feel but also that one should accept divine providences suppliantly.

If pigs were human - they'd say: Cést la vie.

If pigs were human

the wild pigs would get even longer teeth.

They would get more and more grim and angry.

More and more they would doubt the power and ideology of the mighty palace pigs and their concerns.

They would less and less respect law and order.

They would loose any trust in the goodness of humanity.

They would less and less accept the propaganda and the lies of the palace pigs.

They would start to fantasise their own world, until... Cést la vie.
